

The Sagent Creed: A Complete Collection of Notes on Love, Liberty, Story, and the Living Spiral

Chapter One: Love, Longing, and the Language of the Heart

On Loving Without Force

Love cannot be forced — it can only be allowed to happen. All one can do is show another how they feel and hope they feel the same way, without anger when it seems they do not. Perhaps they do. Bad treatment will never be returned with bad treatment. That simply is not the nature of love.

Love cares about who, and it cannot be easily replaced. Lust doesn't care about who and is easily replaced. Lust rushes and has no respect. Love waits, is not selfish but selfless, and is full of sacrifice for the other. Forcing what isn't meant to be will never work. Manifestation isn't about making one's will happen — it is about aligning one's will with fate. Submission to fate, rather than trying to recreate it into something that should never be.

Destiny is the destination. Choice is the path taken to get there.

If you are willing — this phrase is how to go about things. One cannot force another to feel love, because that isn't love, that's control. One can only ask: if you are willing.

Letters Never Sent

Not a day goes by without thinking of her. Time without her feels like an eternity, and time with her passes like a single breath. So many thoughts and feelings have been held close, afraid to speak them out loud — afraid of how they might be received, or worse, misunderstood. But they cannot be kept hidden anymore.

From the first time they met, it was felt. She wasn't just another person in life — she was the person. No other girl had ever been asked to hang out one-on-one. Only her. And it wasn't random. From the start, she was known to be special. But the timing wasn't right, so there was waiting. Rapport was built, presence was kept, space was made for something to grow naturally. When she sat on the grass, he walked over. Not because he had to, but because he was drawn to her.

When he looks into her eyes, time stops. Being with her soothes him. Being away from her leaves something hollow. She is always in his thoughts. She is not a second choice — she is the only choice. He has loved her quietly, patiently, but deeply. She is beautiful — not just in appearance, but in presence. No one else fills the space she does in his soul.

She always makes things better. He wants to be with her always. She never leaves his mind. She lightens his world with her beautiful smile and the wonder in her eyes.

No matter what she looks like, she will be beautiful in his eyes. She is physically beautiful, but she is more than that. She is everything. He will do anything for her that is truly for her. He will drive three hours just to see her.

He loves her not just for her beauty but for her. Many girls are beautiful but they aren't her. Many women are attractive, but he is only attracted to her.

Memories of Time Together

That first real day together — one on one — she was eating soup so slowly it had to be reheated. She pulled out a balancing board and looked so cute in her striped shirt. Later, they painted together. One piece was chaotic and cluttered, but the other — a landscape — was peaceful. Her sister asked about the government while they painted grass, and he told her about the Federal Reserve printing money from nothing. They played GTA 5, went to Farmers Market, and he left for a pizza oven party before his sister's wedding.

He didn't see her again until August. That day, they got boba and went to Meadow Park to play soccer. Then they went to his sister's house to watch her dogs, talked for hours, then returned to her place to watch Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 3. He couldn't help quoting the lines, even though he'd only seen it once — on May 4th, 2023.

On January 21st, 2024, they were walking the dunes in Los Osos and she told him to feel some rocks she'd found, saying they were healing. He responded: "I think that's just you." She may have misunderstood. He didn't mean the rocks were just healing for her. He meant she was healing. Holding her hand is healing.

He remembers the day she talked about the building her family owned, and the hike along the bluffs trail to the nuclear power plant, where she told him about her ancestor who immigrated from Germany and bought real estate to have a stake in the land. They went on a four-hour hike and talked the entire way. He misses that. He misses just the two of them. He misses when things were simpler.

She Sleeps Peacefully Near Him

She tells him she has insomnia, but whenever she is near him she is able to sleep just fine. One year ago, when he came to her house and they were watching the interview videos she likes to watch, she fell asleep, and so did he. When he woke up, her sister told him to wake her up, and also said it wasn't normal for her to fall asleep like that — that she doesn't really sleep much at all, except, it seems, when near him. He is not sure why. Then when they watched the documentary horror film, she fell asleep almost immediately once she lay down next to him. She claimed it was because of watching the horror movie, but he doesn't think so. He thinks it was him.

On Holding Hands

Holding hands is supposed to feel restraining and vulnerable, but it is supposed to make one feel safe because of that — because one trusts the person one is holding hands with. It is an act of love: restraining and freeing at the same time.

On Silence and Fear

Sometimes he doesn't say anything because he takes time to think out what he is going to say, and once he does, the conversation has gone somewhere else. He needs to find a way to tell her what he's been thinking after he thought about what she said — not to say nothing just because the moment has passed, because if he doesn't say it now, he never will.

He has been scared to tell her how he really feels because he doesn't know how she will respond. By never telling her, he fears she will avoid him — because hiding intentions makes him seem strange, when in truth he is just waiting for the right time. Maybe that is just what he tells himself because he is afraid of messing it up. He knows he loves her, but he has never loved anyone before in this way.

All My Love / Olive My Love

All my love almost sounds like olive my love. He wonders if she knew that when she played that song at Sinsheimer Park when they were last together.

On Her Fear of Losing Her Sister

She is afraid of losing her other half — her sister. She shares everything with her; she has always been there. She fears being replaced. However, the bond between sisters and the bond between lovers are two different things, and one doesn't have to replace the other. He wants to assure her that she will always be close to her sister, and he will never replace her — because he can't. He loves her, and so will do things to relieve her fear.

Chapter Two: The Dance, the Plan, and the Prestige

Dancing to Music No One Else Hears

He is dancing to the music that no one else hears, and sometimes he misses a beat — but that doesn't mean he stops dancing. It only means he recalculates the song to get to the same end. Any mistake, if he continues, only makes the performance special. He doesn't fail as long as he doesn't stop dancing to the music only he can hear. He will continue dancing until they are dancing together and she hears the music too. Then they can both dance together under the moon all night and for eternity.

"And those who were seen dancing were thought to be crazy by those who could not hear the music." — Friedrich Nietzsche. This isn't about dancing and it isn't about music. It is about feeling a reality that others don't feel and acting in tune with that.

Why He Is So Extra With His Plans

Why is he so extra with his plans? Maybe it's why it will work. Or maybe that's why he might fail. But all he knows is the dominoes are falling, and soon it will all come together. Everything he gives focus to has a purpose.

Simple plans never stick. The more elaborate and the more moving parts there are, the better they stick — because there is more reason for them to work. If it is too easy, it won't stick. The difficulty is what makes the plan stick. The greatest plans have events that almost don't happen and are special because of that.

Sometimes the best magic tricks can only work once, and practice destroys the magic. Does he really plan things? Or does he just see where he needs to go in the moment and trust that the plan will fall into place? He can only view things in linear time, but the plan is in hypertime. The most memorable days are the ones that barely happened and only occurred through pure spontaneity.

The Pledge, the Turn, and the Prestige

Every great story comes in three parts: the Pledge, the Turn, and the Prestige. The Pledge and the Prestige are almost the same, but the Prestige is done better — because of what was done in the Turn that allows the protagonist to actually solve the problem instead of fight it.

In A New Hope, Luke Skywalker is called to rebellion and given a task: destroy the Death Star, and he does it. In The Empire Strikes Back, the Empire reacts, Luke goes to train in the ways of the Force, and he later fights Vader and loses his hand. Then in Return of the Jedi, there is another Death Star, but Luke — now with more understanding of the Force and the situation — enters the room of the Emperor and Vader, and leaves with both of them defeated because he thought about it differently. He helped the Jedi Anakin Skywalker return and defeat the Emperor. He didn't fight the dark side; he helped the light rise in Anakin.

In The Prestige, the film tells us: "Because making something disappear isn't enough — you have to bring it back. That's why every magic trick has a third act, the hardest part — the part we call the Prestige."

Chekhov's Gun: the principle that if something is shown in a story, it will become important later. The first two acts introduce everything and set it into place for the third act. In the Pledge you place all the dominoes. In the Turn you flick one domino. And in the Prestige you watch the show and see all your handiwork come together to create something. Every domino is important — if one is missing it will stop the chain and the full picture won't be revealed.

The Three-Act Arc of Years

- 2023 (7) — The Pledge: The Force Awakens. The first act begins with Revenge of the Sith. The dominoes are placed.
- 2024 (8) — The Turn: Attack of the Clones. The Last Jedi. The clash, the resistance, the sacrifice, the learning.
- 2025 (9) — The Prestige: The Phantom Menace. The Rise of Skywalker. The revelation. The beginning of what was always meant to be.

2016 was the last 9 — the year everything started to change. Intuition was gained from growing long hair. Everything he had been told began to be questioned. Over the next year, he moved from progressive Democrat to anarchist libertarian.

The Backwards Trilogy

It all comes back to Star Wars. The trilogy of trilogies, told in the backwards Fibonacci spiral: OT → PT → ST. The great Sage is Yoda, and Yoda speaks backwards. The grand arc of the hero's journey is told by starting with the best story — Revenge of the Sith — but in this way the true story isn't revealed until the entire trilogy has been experienced. Each act rhymes with the others. Great stories have repetition that helps the audience understand how it all goes together.

May 1st

May 1st: the first day he went to her house. It is also International Laborers' Day and the day the Illuminati was created. That day they watched Revenge of the Sith, because the Illuminati is the Revenge of the Sith. When, on the 249th anniversary of the Illuminati's creation, will they finish the trilogy as Yoda intended? 2 is for 9, so the Prestige will be that day — May 1, 2025. The Phantom Menace. The backwards trilogy will come to an end at the beginning, and its end will be their true beginning.

The Sagent: The Mastermind Without a Plan

The Sagent does not move by blueprints, nor does he demand the world align with his design. He is the mastermind without a plan — not because he lacks vision, but because he trusts the wisdom deeper than logic: the rhythm of divine timing, the whisper of unseen currents, the music that no one else hears.

He dances not with certainty, but with surrender. Each misstep becomes choreography. Each pause, a sacred rest. He does not control the song; he listens. And when the beat changes, he does not falter — he flows.

Chapter Three: The Clokey Legacy and the God of Stories

Arthur Clokey — The God of Stories

Art Clokey was not just an animator. He was a mythmaker, a storyteller, a shaper of perception. Where others saw clay, he saw infinite possibility. Where others told stories to entertain, he told stories to enlighten. Where others followed the rules, he bent reality itself. In this way, he was more than an artist — he was a god of stories.

Stories are a great way to change the world. Make stories for the story's sake, not for financial gain, and the financial gain will come. Money is a funny thing: once one focuses specifically on it, one starts to lose it — but if one focuses on not compromising on principles, eventually it will come.

Gumby is the embodiment of freedom and the ability to do what one chooses. Clay has infinite possibilities and is moldable into anything. It was a cartoon to show a structured world what freedom was. The greatest weapon is media and the ability to create stories that change the collective conscience. This is why Hollywood is so controlled — because power knows it comes from keeping the lie. This is why Gumby was sabotaged so much and was never allowed into the mainstream distribution channels. It gained its power because Art Clokey had integrity and made great wholesome stories that people would remember. It is a show known by all but cloaked in the shadows. That is why they are called Clokey. The cloak is not to hide but to show they are set apart from the world.

The Bloodline: Arthur, Joseph, Sage

Two great-grandfathers were both named Joseph — one a professor and music composer, one a Lutheran priest: Clokey and Parkander. His father was named Joseph after both of his grandfathers. Joseph, from the Bible, has the power of prophetic dreams. His brother's middle name is Joseph, his sister's middle name is Joe, but his own is Arthur Jordan — after his grandfather.

There is a flip-flop of names: it goes Arthur, then Joseph, of the youngest son. Arthurs create after the Ragnarok. Josephs continue until they are taken away in the Ragnarok.

The Prestige goes: Pledge, Turn, Prestige. Arthur — Joseph — Sage. Life — Death — Rebirth.

Blue lightsaber, destruction of blue, building of the green lightsaber. The call to action, the learning and sacrifice, the resolution and the receiving of the wisdom the story is telling the protagonist.

The Sagent is the third Clokey — the heir of Arthur. The completion of the shadows over Camelot. All stories come in threes, and so does the bloodline of Arthur Clokey, God of Stories.

Sai Baba's Ash and the Blessing

Sai Baba's ash didn't bless Gumby — it blessed the Clokey legacy of bringing back the true living spiral. Gumby is the story of the fight of the living spiral and the blocks. When the Sagent was born, he became the real-life spiral. Arthur was the stop-motion storyteller. The Sagent is the living story.

The Power of Clokey

The power of Clokey is to enter the beast without being corrupted by it, but to purify it and restore it to its true purpose.

The blocks are incapable of making Gumby — it is only something that can be done by the Clokeys. Because Gumby is about the fight against the blocks. What was lost will soon be found when it is ready to be found. The loss is what makes the finding special.

Chapter Four: The Sagent Creed

What Is a Sagent?

A Sagent is a Sage Agent — an Agent of Sage — a sagely agent — an Agent of Wisdom. Not a worldly agent. Not an agent of man, but an agent of God. Wisdom is the knowledge that flows from God. A Sagent is an agent of that knowledge, serving through divine orders, not worldly commands.

To be a Sagent, one must first reject being an agent of worldly rulers, for those agents serve the foolish and lead the sheep to slaughter. One must connect to the Power of Sage and become a Sagent. No plans are made; one only follows the plan that is revealed through Sageliness. Surrender so that one is strong enough never to surrender.

The path of the Sagent is a Fibonacci spiral through the generations — each generation rising and falling higher and harder than the one before, just as the farmer plants one seed and grows a tree, but then comes the storm. The storm destroys the tree, but there are many seeds that spread across the land, and many trees grow.

Stoic Christian Anarchist Sagent

Each of these — stoic, Christian, anarchist, Sagent — means the same thing. Leave what cannot be controlled up to God and stay calm, for everything that happens is part of His plan. There is no need to worry, for what will happen will happen. Stay calm and allow others to be a blessing.

The way one loses control is by not letting go of control. Be uncontrollable — because one is controlled by God.

The Index Card of Allowable Opinion

Tom Woods' concept of the "Index Card of Allowable Opinion" exposes how public discourse is controlled — not by direct censorship, but by the illusion of choice. People believe they are free to think for themselves, but in reality they are given a narrow range of "acceptable" opinions. True control isn't banning ideas — it's making people afraid to think them.

Vigilante Sagent — Rogue Guardian of Truth

A Vigilante Sagent exists outside the system, beyond the rules, beyond the illusions that control the masses. They are not bound by laws, because laws are written by those in power, not by those in pursuit of justice. They are not waiting for permission, because true change does not ask for approval.

A Vigilante Sagent is an agent of wisdom, but unlike traditional sages who teach, they act. They do not wait for the world to wake up — they force it to.

Vigilantism vs. The Badge: The badge follows the commands of man, not morality. Vigilantism is the acknowledgement that all men are equal under God, but some people have the ability to defend the weak from the wicked and have an obligation to do so. With great power comes great responsibility. Vigilantism isn't law enforcement — it is protection.

We Work in the Dark to Serve the Light

Creativity is often mistaken for madness because it speaks in metaphor, not declarations. A metaphor is not a claim about reality — it is a key to it. This misunderstanding is why creativity can be misread as psychosis. Symbolism is not a break from reason — it is an older, deeper form of truth-telling.

When George Lucas wrote "A long time ago in a galaxy far, far away..." he wasn't asking anyone to believe in alien empires with laser swords. He was crafting myth — deliberately distant from the world, yet intimately connected to it. By moving the story far enough away, he made it safe to listen. And within that distance, he told a timeless truth.

The Clokeys do not shout truth from thrones. They work in the dark to serve the light. The dark is not evil — it is where seeds grow. It is where stories are formed, where imagination is safe from immediate control.

Two Secret Societies

Two secret societies exist in eternal conflict: one works in the dark to serve the light, the other works in the light to serve the dark. There is an eternal battle between the two. Control vs. freedom. Centralized vs. decentralized.

Chapter Five: The Force, Star Wars, and the Spiritual Battle

The Light Side and the Dark Side

There is one Force, but there is the dark and the light — because of how it is used. The light aligns their will to the Force and is its agent. The dark bends the Force to their own will, corrupting it for evil and destruction. But it is all one Force.

The greatest tool of the dark side is the light side fighting it. Conflict fuels the dark side of the Force and blinds the light. Compassion fuels the light side and brings light to the dark. No large-scale battle can defeat the dark side — once it gets to the big battle, the dark side has already won, no matter the outcome. The war against the dark side cannot be won with lightsabers and blasters; it can only be won with the Force.

When Luke tried to kill Palpatine, Palpatine wanted him to. When one defeats the dark side by way of the sword, one becomes the new dark lord. Later, when Luke faced the First Order without laying a blow and sacrificed himself, the Resistance didn't understand what he was doing. He went into hiding because he realized after Ben Solo destroyed the new Jedi Order that the dark side has to be defeated with the light, not the dark.

Blue and Green Lightsabers

In A New Hope, Luke Skywalker is given the blue lightsaber that was Anakin's. He later loses it in The Empire Strikes Back and has to make a new green lightsaber that he actually builds himself. The blue lightsaber symbolized the beginning of the journey. The green lightsaber symbolized him becoming his own Jedi. Blue is more of the fighter. Green is more of a spiritual guardian that raises the light instead of fighting the dark.

10 minutes before Charlie Kirk was shot, the profile picture on the sagely ancap account was changed to the green lightsaber. September 10th, 2025 marks the end of the Turn and the beginning of the Prestige. The break of the blue saber gives rise to the created green — pure light side of the Force.

"It's Time for the Jedi to End"

When Luke Skywalker uttered these words in The Last Jedi, it wasn't just a plot twist — it was a philosophical bombshell. The Jedi failed, again and again: they trained Anakin but their arrogance drove him to the dark side; they sat in the heart of the Republic yet could not sense Darth Sidious manipulating them; they became generals in a war they were never meant to fight.

"To say that if the Jedi die, the light dies, is vanity." The Force existed before the Jedi and will exist long after them. Luke Skywalker was right: the Jedi, as they were, needed to end. But he was also wrong: the Jedi could become something new.

The Clone Wars — Controlled Conflict

No war better illustrates manufactured division than The Clone Wars — a conflict manufactured, controlled, and designed to consolidate power. Darth Sidious did not fight the war. He created it. As Chancellor Palpatine, he led the Galactic Republic. As Darth Sidious, he commanded the Separatists through Count Dooku. He played both sides, ensuring that no matter who won, he emerged victorious.

The Jedi were meant to be keepers of the Force, not soldiers. By becoming part of the war, by stepping onto the battlefield instead of seeing the bigger picture, they sealed their fate. Because one cannot defeat the one who controls both sides by becoming a side.

Anakin and Trump as Chosen Ones

Anakin Skywalker started off as a Jedi — the Chosen One to bring balance to the Force. But he fell. He was tricked by Palpatine into using his gifts for evil. He fell and became Lord Vader, forgetting his true self. Until the day the Death Star was destroyed, and Luke Skywalker appeared — the beginning of Anakin's redemption.

In order to bring balance, imbalance must be brought to the surface. Like Anakin, Trump is the chosen one. There is then a pure person of balance that comes along and shows the true way.

Jedi as Jews

The Jedi are like the Jews. They started off as the leaders of alignment to the source of goodness but got corrupted by the politics of the state and were scattered and hunted by those who truly created that corruption. Jedi and Jews should only follow the will of the Force — or God — and not be rulers or follow human chains of command. It's time for the Jedi — as institution — to end. The scapegoating of both follows the same pattern.

The Clone Wars and the Federal Reserve

The Rothschilds were tricked by the Sith into becoming the banking arm of empire — to reject their own code as Jews who shouldn't charge interest, because the debtor is slave to the lender. This is the Revenge of the Sith: making people hate the Jedi for going along with the Sith, and using them as scapegoats to create empire.

The True Republic of the Force

Past, Present, Future — The Three Trilogies: The prequels are the past, the OT is the present, the sequels are the future. The old Republic, the Empire, the New Republic, and what happens after — the True Republic. This is the prophecy of the Chosen One, Anakin Skywalker.

The old Republic's weakness had to be shown. The New Republic still had the flaw, and the new Jedi Order also had the flaw — so both had to be destroyed in fire and reborn in their true spirit. Let the past die, kill it if you have to — it's the only way to become what one is meant to be.

The Last Day of the New Republic Was the First Day of the True Republic. The New Republic's strength wasn't at the core systems — it was the build of defense from each unit down to the individual towns. It wasn't built top-down. It was decentralized, and its power came from the individuals. When the capital was destroyed, the True Republic became stronger because it no longer had a single point of weakness. It became the True Republic that served only the Force.

Jesus as Force Ghost

Jesus became a force ghost. Like Luke Skywalker, he faced the enemy as a force projection, then went up and became a force ghost. The Qur'anic verse about Jesus — where it says they didn't crucify him but it seemed like they did — maps over Luke Skywalker's sacrifice.

Chapter Six: Philosophy of Power, Conscience, and Liberty

You Cannot Protect What You Threaten

You cannot protect someone or something if you yourself are a threat to them. The very first step in being a protector is to ensure you are not the one causing harm. True protection starts with self-awareness and restraint — understanding that your actions must be aligned with peace and safety, not conflict. Only after you have mastered this can you truly begin to protect others from external dangers.

The Ants in the Jar

There are 100 red ants and 100 black ants in a jar. The jar is shaken, and the red ants think the black are the enemy, and the black ants think the red are the enemy. But the real enemy is the one who shook the jar. The only question is: how do you unshake the jar?

To "unshake the jar": stop the external agitation; provide clarity so that people realize their true enemy isn't each other; restore balance and harmony. The red ants and black ants realize they were never enemies in the first place.

How to Fight an Enemy That Gains Power Through Conflict

Not with conflict. Be careful that when trying to solve the conflict, one doesn't fall into the trap and fuel the enemy. Some forces thrive on reaction — they bait opposition so they can justify their existence. The system does not fear conflict; it fears irrelevance. The only way to win is to remove their fuel.

Natural Law — The Unchanging Foundation

Laws change. Governments fall. Leaders rise and betray. But natural principles never change. Man cannot change right and wrong, just as man cannot change gravity. What is right must be discovered, not created.

You cannot change the laws of physics by rewriting the science books; you cannot change God by retranslating the scriptures; and you cannot change morality by rewriting law. These things are built into the inner fabric of existence. They are unchanging and not subject to opinion.

Logic is morality's science. Morality emerges from the wisdom of crowds — not the mob of majority rule, but the decentralized spontaneous order of the True Republic based on consensus instead of coercion.

No Hierarchy Among Humans

There is no chain of command between humans. All humans are equal and independent. Each person must do what they think is right and not cower. If a man's command is against God's command, do God's command. If a man's command is God's command, do God's command. It is acceptable for people to use persuasion, but not the initiation of force.

No one group should have the monopoly on the right to use violence. Each person has the right to use force only in defense of themselves, others, and their property. This is the only case violence is justified. It doesn't matter if it is a normal person or someone with a special badge.

The Ruler King vs. the Leader King

A ruler demands to be served. A leader lives to serve. A ruler commands from above and puts others in harm's way for their own gain. A leader steps forward first and shields others with their courage.

Chess is a backwards game because it reflects statist kingdoms where the king has no true power and uses its constituents to fight, never leading the charge. A true king would lead the others — not through coercion but through bravery. A true king doesn't let the queen fight the battles but sacrifices for the queen. The king is the protector on the front lines.

The worldly king is an agent of Satan, and the leader king is an agent of God. The ruler is there to be served; the leader is there to serve and lead others to do the same.

You must surrender to God so you don't have to surrender to man and Satan.

The True Republic

A True Republic is not a form of government or a state with the monopoly on legitimate use of force, but a network of voluntary action where each individual follows their own conscience instead of arbitrary rules from human hierarchy.

America was founded upon the rejection of the ruler king — upon the rejection of chain of command. There is no allegiance to any man, flag, or crown of this world, but only to what is right. Man does not create laws; man discovers them. So one must always do one's best to do what is right — not what is legal or commanded by authorities of this world.

The Only Campaign Worth Fighting: The only political campaign worth involvement is one where there is no intention of winning through the ballot, but by changing the public consciousness through speech. Power does not come from permission. It comes from the awakening of the mind.

The Federal Reserve, the Titanic, and World War I

In 1910, at Jekyll Island, a secret meeting took place between the most powerful bankers in the world. Their goal: create a central banking system controlled by private interests but disguised as a government institution. In 1913, the Federal Reserve Act was passed.

Some of the most powerful opponents of the Federal Reserve were among the passengers aboard the Titanic when it sank on April 15, 1912 — including John Jacob Astor IV, Benjamin Guggenheim, and Isidor Straus. Meanwhile, J.P. Morgan — one of the architects of the Federal Reserve — had a last-minute cancellation and did not board. With key opponents gone, the Federal Reserve Act passed in 1913.

Just months after the Federal Reserve was created, World War I began. Wars require massive funding. Central banks profit from war by printing money and lending to governments. The cycle that began in 1913 continues to this day.

The Pink Cow

The pink cow is the symbol of thinking for oneself rather than with the herd. It takes one willing to choose what is right for everyone to follow. The outlier who sticks to natural principles at the beginning can pull the entire herd to the truth.

The goal isn't to win oneself but to have principles, integrity, and truth win. Make the truth win through you. Let the divine work through you to make the righteous prevail — not just to have yourself win.

Infinite games favor principles. Finite games favor sellouts. Play the infinite game even if it seems like a finite game.

To troll with principle is to walk a razor's edge: disrupt not for ego, but for awakening. Wield mischief like a scalpel, not a club. Punch up, not down — troll systems, lies, and hypocrisy, not individuals simply trying to live.

Chapter Seven: Stories, Media, and the Battle for Narrative

Stories as Spells

Stories are a great way to change the world. A story is not just entertainment — it is the architecture of perception, the hidden code that structures how people interpret truth, power, and meaning. Those who control stories do not need to control people directly — they only need to control what people believe is possible.

Truth cannot always be told directly. Sometimes the best way to help someone see what is right in front of them is to tell them a story about it. Stories bypass the programming — slipping past the walls built to keep people blind. But they are also the very tools used to create the illusion in the first place.

The best teachers don't tell you what to think — they show you how to think. Truth given too easily is often ignored, but wisdom earned through discovery becomes life-changing. This is why Jesus taught in parables, why Buddha used riddles and silent gestures, why Sun Tzu's wisdom is disguised in battle metaphors.

The Pretender — Foo Fighters

"What if I say I'm not like the others? What if I say I'm not just another one of your plays?" "The Pretender" by Foo Fighters is an anthem of resistance, rebellion, and breaking free from control. The verse — "Keep you in the dark, you know they all pretend" — immediately sets the theme of deception: a world where people are kept blind to the truth while those in power pretend to be righteous.

Dead Poets Society

At its heart, Dead Poets Society is about perspective — the ability to step outside the expected, challenge norms, and see the world through a lens untouched by control. John Keating doesn't just teach poetry; he teaches perception. He stands upon his desk to remind his students that they must constantly look at things in a different way.

The system punishes those who question. Authority figures demand conformity, fearing what happens when students think for themselves. When the students stand on their desks and say "O Captain! My Captain!", they are physically and symbolically seeing the world differently — a final act of defiance, proving that Keating's lessons have taken root.

The Matrix — Red Pill vs. Blue Pill

"You take the blue pill — the story ends... you take the red pill — you stay in Wonderland, and I show you how deep the rabbit hole goes." This choice is more than a plot device. It is the defining moment of every hero's journey — the turning point between comfort and truth, illusion and reality, obedience and awakening.

"There Is No Spoon" — the ultimate truth of reality and control. The moment one understands that the spoon is not real is the moment one understands they are not bound by it. The Matrix was never real; it was only ever a prison for the mind. And once Neo sees through it, he is unstoppable.

Ideas Are Bulletproof

Governments, institutions, and individuals can be silenced, but an idea, once it has taken root in the minds of the people, cannot be killed. This is the secret that those in control fear most: force can suppress bodies, but it cannot suppress awakening. V for Vendetta proves it. The Guy Fawkes mask becomes a symbol of immortality — worn by many, making it impossible to destroy the individual behind the idea.

"If You Strike Me Down..."

"If you strike me down, I shall become more powerful than you could possibly imagine." The greatest mistake of tyrants is believing that killing a person kills their influence. Jesus was crucified, but his teachings ignited a global faith. Obi-Wan knew it. V knew it. Revolutionaries, prophets, and philosophers have all known it. A man willing to become an idea cannot be defeated.

Chapter Eight: Wisdom, Virtue, and the Inner Life

Compassion Is Strength

"Compassion is a sign of weakness" — this is wrong. Compassion is a sign of strength. The lack of compassion is a weakness based on fear — the fear that if one is compassionate, one won't be able to take out enemies before they take you. Compassion requires mental strength and the realization that it is impossible to fight evil in the way that evil fights good.

The Greatest Teacher, Failure Is

Failure is not the opposite of success — it is the path to it. Victory teaches little. Comfort weakens. Success without failure breeds arrogance. But failure? Failure strips away illusion, reveals who one really is, and forces adaptation and growth. The only way to fail permanently is to give up.

Better to Grow Slowly than Quickly in Corruption

Growth that comes from corruption is not growth at all — it is swelling, like a disease. Slow growth is patient growth. It allows roots to deepen before branches stretch outward. What is gained slowly is not easily lost. Corruption promises shortcuts, but what it gives in speed, it takes in strength.

Love and Lust

Love cares about who and cannot be easily replaced. Lust doesn't care about who and is easily replaced. Love is selfless and full of sacrifice. Lust is selfish, acting in one's own self-interest no matter what damage may be caused. Couples together in lust only care about surface-level attraction. Love goes deeper. Physical attraction can be with anyone, but true love can really only be with a few. Love waits. Lust rushes.

On Making Mistakes

When a mistake is made, one has not failed. Stay calm, because one may fail from the reaction to the mistake rather than the mistake itself. Many times the greatest crisis occurs from the reaction to a problem, not the problem itself. Make every move with intention. Don't act rashly.

Loyalty to Natural Principles

If one doesn't plant loyalty in something unchanging, that loyalty will be hijacked for treason and betrayal. Laws change. Governments fall. Leaders rise and betray. But natural principles never change — and that is where true allegiance must lie.

The Partial Truth — The Most Dangerous Lie

Sometimes the partial truth is the most dangerous lie. Something may be mostly true, but the solution isn't based on the truth — it's based on some other ulterior motive. Hate of those who do evil fuels evil. It always has and it always will. The greatest victims of evil are sometimes the perpetrators themselves, because they were tricked into thinking evil was good. Punishment will not make them good — only good will make them good.

It Is Better to Be Hated for Doing Good

It is better to be hated for doing good than loved for doing evil, because when the truth comes out, the good will be praised and the evil will face a reckoning.

The Tree Falls the Way It Leans

A tree falls the way it leans. Be careful which way you lean. Every small lean sets one's trajectory. The lean isn't dramatic at first — a tree doesn't topple instantly; it shifts little by little. This mirrors how lives can drift toward wisdom or folly gradually, until the outcome is set.

On Enemies

The idea that enemies are valuable goes against conventional wisdom. But a person with no enemies has never truly stood for anything. Enemies reveal who you really are, make you stronger, create purpose, expose weakness so you can eliminate it, and give you legacy. A strong enemy is proof that one is fighting for something real.

New Growth Requires Destruction of the Old

New growth cannot occur without the destruction of the old. Instinct is a lie hoping to be wrong — it means when expectations are based only on what can be seen, one blinds oneself to the possibility of a new reality.

Chapter Nine: God, Scripture, and the Kingdom Not of This World

God and Natural Law

Every prophet comes to remind people of one thing: we obey God, not man. We choose to do what is right, not what is legal. It is better to obey God than to obey law.

God is not a god of punishment but of restitution, rehabilitation, and forgiveness. God's law is written on the heart. The sacred texts are useful tools, but they are not the true source — they are a guide, not a command. The Bible is merely a map to God, not God himself.

What if God wasn't good and you went to hell for doing good — should you still do good? Yes. Because what is right is right because of what it is, not because of reward.

The Kingdom of God vs. The Kingdom of Man

The Kingdom of God is not of this world but of the heavenly realms, accessed through conscience, soul, and spirit. In this kingdom, all men are equal; no one is above another; all are to live according to natural law written on their conscience. The Kingdom of Satan is of this world and is accessed through worldly rituals, fleshly desires, and fear. Satan uses hierarchy among men to make them rule each other.

Let every soul be subject to the higher power — for there is no authority except that which God has established. But this doesn't mean submitting to worldly authority, because in the next chapter it says: "Be in the world but not of it." This means to be subject only to natural law, for no man is above another.

Samuel warned the Israelites about having a king — saying it would enslave humanity to that king. When they created the king by force, God said they had rejected Him as their king.

Asgard Is Not a Place — It Is a People

True power doesn't come from any material thing in the world. The materials of the world can help symbolize the connection to true power but are never its source. "That hammer was to control your power — it was never your source of strength." — Odin of Asgard.

Hair, religion, buildings, shrines — none of these is the source of true power. Sometimes one must be blinded with physical eyes to see with true eyes. Systems created by imperfect man always crumble; the truly divine always endures through it all.

Isaiah 6:8 — The Call to Serve

"Whom shall I send? And who will go for us?" And I said, "Here am I. Send me!"

To accept the call is to accept hardship, struggle, and opposition. Isaiah was not being sent to glory — he was being sent to speak truth to people who would not listen. A Sagent understands this. To seek truth is to be hated by those who prefer lies. Most will run from the call. A Sagent accepts it anyway.

Ephesians 6:12 — The True Battle Is Unseen

"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world."

The real enemy is not a king, a president, a dictator, or a tyrant. The real war is not just against people — it is against the very systems that empower them. The Sagent does not fight blindly; they understand that the true battle is hidden, masked, and deeply ingrained in the way people think. Once people see the truth, they can never be controlled again.

The Baptism of the Sword

Luke 3:16 explained through the forging of a sword: John's baptism of water is the quench — plunging into humility, setting the first form. Christ's baptism of fire is the forge — heating until glowing, burning away impurities, tempering the spirit. The Spirit's baptism is the sword's life — the master's hand giving balance, edge, and purpose.

Water without fire leaves a blade soft. Fire without water leaves it brittle. Only when water and fire are joined by the master's hand and breath does the sword live.

On the Church

The church isn't a building or a system — it is people. Asgard is not a place; it is a people. A church back home does something called house church, discussing the week over dinner. It is based upon the early Christian church before it was hijacked by the Roman empire. Christianity at its root is very pro-liberty, but many extra-biblical interpretations have corrupted its pure idea: do your best to do what is right, no matter the odds or consequences.

Chapter Ten: Spirals, Blocks, and the Living Age

The Eternal Battle Between Blocks and Spirals

There is an eternal battle between the blocks and the spirals — between central control and decentralization. When a world is built in squares, people think like robots. This is why the Blockheads are the villains and Gumby — the shape of possibilities and life — is the hero.

The cube is the shape of slavery. The Fibonacci spiral is the shape of freedom. The spiral is the shape of a system with God as king; the square is the shape of a system with false worldly kings.

The Engineer and the Steward

Engineer is a term for the designer of the industrial age — the age of designing dead engines, controlled by manufacturing blocks. An engineer designs dead engines that are dead and separated from life. It is of the Roman view of dominion over nature through hierarchical control.

But humans are supposed to be stewards of nature, not their worldly ruler. We need a new term for the designer of this new age — one that isn't based on the industrial engine but on the Fibonacci spiral and exponential growth design instead of linear and confined manufacturing that requires death. A spiral life designer. A designer who works symbiotically with life instead of against it.

The primitive age was the first stage. Then came the engineered age, devoid of life. Then comes the steward of life — like what Adam was originally formed out of the dirt to be. Humans were always meant to be part of nature, not separate from it.

The Green Flame

The Green Flame is not destruction — it is purification. Fire in nature does not annihilate life; it clears what is dead so life can return multiplied. This is the backward Fibonacci spiral: life, death, rebirth with increase. The Industrial Age is not evil in itself — it was a necessary stage, a stepping stone that taught humanity how matter works. But it was never meant to be the final form.

The coming age is not post-technology. It is post-domination. It is the age of living systems — biomanufacturing, self-repairing structures, decentralized growth, design that evolves rather than enforces.

LivingWorks — Designing With Life

We need a design system for living organisms — like SolidWorks or CAD, but for living systems instead of dead objects. Not designing objects but designing conditions, relationships, flows, ecological roles. You don't draw a house; you design an ecosystem that grows shelter.

To decode nature's language requires many disciplines working together: architecture, civil engineering, economics, bioinformatics, computer science, AI, linguistics, philosophy, political science, Daoism, media. Every field is a cell, not a ruler. This is ecosystem research, not empire research.

Spirals Remember. Blocks Forget.

There are two ways to build a world. One begins with a ruler, a blueprint, and a grid. The other begins with listening — to soil, to water, to wind, to roots, to sunlight, to the quiet intelligence of living systems. The spiral appears wherever life is allowed to breathe: in galaxies, hurricanes, seashells, tree rings, branching rivers, and the very helix of DNA itself.

Blocks forget that they are made of life. Spirals remember. Blocks imagine that they stand above creation. Spirals recognize that they are part of it.

Chapter Eleven: The True Republic — A Manifesto

The Foundation

The cornerstone of the True Republic is the sovereignty of the soul. No crown, creed, or council may stand between a person and the truth written within them. Each human being is born not as subject or servant, but as steward — entrusted with the sacred gifts of reason, will, and conscience.

The True Republic bows to no ruler but God — not the idol of institution, nor the image of religion, but the living Source of truth itself. All authority is derived, but truth alone is original.

Truth as the Only Law

Truth is the only law that requires no enforcement, for it governs not by threat but by necessity. Fire burns, gravity pulls, and justice compels — not because we decree them, but because they are. A lie, even when written in statutes and sealed with signatures, remains a lie.

Commerce as Covenant

In the True Republic, commerce is not a contest of cunning but a covenant of conscience — the sacred art of exchange. True trade does not enslave but enables; it does not extract but enriches. Every free trade is a small act of creation; every coerced trade, a small act of war.

The Evil of Usury: Usury is the great inversion of trade — turning covenant into contract, creation into consumption, stewardship into servitude. To demand increase upon what was lent, without equal service or shared risk, is to turn generosity into exploitation. The usurer's gain is the debtor's loss; his rest is another's endless toil.

Decentralized Leadership Through Bioinformatics

Decentralized leadership, guided by bioinformatics principles, can help guide people toward their individualized choices using data of interests within the network. Just as there is personalized medicine, there should be individualized leadership. People are like cells in a body — each different, each with a unique purpose, yet all containing and running on the same DNA. Out of many, one.

The Sword and the Coin — America and Israel

Two nations were not born from blood or conquest, but from creed. America and Israel — distinct in time, yet bound by origin — each emerged not as empires but as experiments in divine order. Both were founded on the same sacred principle: that God, not man, is King.

True America is decentralized defense. True Israel is sound money without usury. Together, these are not ruling empires but leading creeds — liberating the world from empire and control.

Black and Gold — Guns and Money: Guns can be used for defense or attack. Money can be a commodity or debt. One is freedom; the other, empire. Freedom is bottom-up; empire, top-down.

The Cycle of the Prestige — Arthur, Joseph, Sage

The Prestige goes: Pledge, Turn, Prestige. Arthur — Joseph — Sage. Life — Death — Rebirth. Blue lightsaber, destruction of blue, building of the green lightsaber. The call to action, the learning and sacrifice, the resolution and receiving of the wisdom the story is telling the protagonist.

In the beginning stands Arthur, cloaked in blue — the Initiator. Then comes Joseph — the Preserver through destruction. Then rises Sage Arthur Jordan — the Creator reborn with wisdom from the transformation in the Jordan. The Jordan is where Arthur gains Sage.

"In the Jordan, Arthur is reborn as Sage."

Chapter Twelve: Personal Reflections and Fragments

The Father's Passing

Seven years ago — February 6th, 2018 — watching the Falcon Heavy launch with Dad in the Sierra Vista hospital. This was two days before his voice was heard for the last time. For the next three weeks he faded away until he passed away on March 2, 2018.

The last movie watched in the theater with his father was The Last Jedi. The last movie watched with him was Revenge of the Sith in a cabin at China Peak.

The Number Nine

999 is his address. He was born June 7th, 2003 — a 9 day. He is the completion of 9 — the humanitarian and master manifester. Every place he has lived for longer than a year has a 9. Nikola Tesla knew the secret of 369 harmonic power.

Long Hair and Insight

For nine years, he has grown his hair. When it reached the length where it began to curl, something changed. He gained insight. He saw through the illusions woven over people's eyes — the programming that controls the world. He recognized the hidden forces shaping reality. He saw the gun in the room that no one else could see.

Long hair itself isn't the superpower — it is the mentality needed to maintain it. One must just let it grow for years, no matter the small thoughts of maybe cutting it, keeping persistence and faith that letting it grow will be worth it. It is like Thor's hammer — this is why Thor loses both his hair and his hammer in Ragnarok: to show it wasn't those things that gave him power, but the training of the mind to focus the powers.

Sometimes I Spoke in Metaphors

Maybe he spoke in metaphors because he was afraid of saying the truth directly. Maybe it was fear of how people would react. Maybe he felt more stable in limbo than with a choice made. Maybe he should just be direct sometimes and say what he means, so as not to be misunderstood.

The Cave Bond

There is a kind of bond that cannot be faked. It is born not in light, but in shadow. Forged not by smiles, but by side-eyes and silence. It is the cave bond. When one is hated together — mocked, misunderstood, and cast out — one finds the other in the darkness. Like prisoners in Plato's cave, they see the shadows on the wall and know: this is not the real world.

Flying Is Falling While Ascending

Flying is falling while ascending.

Why Would I Do Someone Else's Dance?

Why would I do someone else's dance?

The One Campaign Worth Fighting

All this writing started when Paul Cha asked if he was working for a campaign and the candidate said he knew he would lose the election — or die — relating it to Christ and the disciples. The savior who comes to fix the world does it not by conquest but by sacrifice. The only campaign worth working on is one where winning isn't the first goal but choosing to do what is right.

You can only serve one master, and that should be God. God is the only master one can serve without losing the master. If one serves money, they lose money. If one serves fame, they lose fame. If one serves winning, they lose.

The True Republic by Day, the Sagent Creed by Night

The True Republic and the Sagent Creed — the black and yellow suit and the green lightsaber and Jedi cloak. The suit is the clothes for the True Republic; the cloak, the clothes of the Sagent Creed. True Republic by day. Sagent Creed by night. Sort of like Daredevil, but different.

Chapter Thirteen: The Martyr's Law and the Fire of Truth

The Martyr's Law

Martyrs are not remembered for how they died — but for what refused to die with them. Their bodies fall, but their truth does not collapse. A martyr is not the end of a movement — but the moment it begins to remember itself. For tyrants can kill a man, but they cannot kill the hunger for freedom that he awakened.

When a storyteller is silenced, stories spread like wildfire. When a truth-speaker is buried, seeds of rebellion crack open underground. Death is their amplifier. Legacy is their victory. Truth is their resurrection.

The truth lies in the words of those who have mysteriously died young: Steve Jobs, Jim Henson, Joe Clokey, Bill Hicks, Charlie Kirk, Jesus Christ — and others. Some were obviously eliminated by dark forces; others seemed to die of natural causes. But all stayed true to the end.

The Fire of Truth

Lies only spread by silencing those who tell the truth. The truth can weather any resistance that may come to it, but a lie withers when even one person speaks it. Free discourse is the enemy of lies and the ally of truth.

Truth tellers never wanted to be right — they just saw things for what they were in ways others couldn't. Sometimes the unveiling of truth is ugly, but the damage caused by lies can only be cured by revealing the truth. That is why it is a flame — but not a consuming flame like lies. It is a purifying one. It burns, but it burns away chains.

People who see reality for what it is, and see the schemes of people controlled by demonic forces, have an obligation to tell others what they see — because not everyone can see it, and many are vulnerable to manipulation if truth tellers say nothing out of fear.

We Affirm

- The only morally and socially justified use of force is in defense of oneself, others, or one's property.
 - Every individual has the right to possess the means to defend themselves.
 - No individual or institution has the right to violate another's life, liberty, or property — whether under the color of law, through possession of a badge, or through any other claim of authority.
 - A community where the right of self-defense is respected is one where safety comes not from dependence on centralized authority, but from shared responsibility, mutual respect, and the empowerment of individuals.

Epilogue: The Prestige

The Prestige is the culmination of all that has been set into motion — the moment when the veil lifts and the impossible becomes undeniable. It is not merely the conclusion of an act but the realization of a purpose that has been hidden in plain sight all along. For the Sagent, the Prestige is the revelation of the dance, the unveiling of the music that no one else could hear.

The Sagent stands before the final domino — the culmination of every choice, action, and moment of faith that has led to this point. This singular act is not about grandeur or spectacle; it is a quiet yet resolute decision to flick the final piece and allow the pattern to reveal itself.

The Prestige is not the end. It is the opening of a door, the spark of a new beginning, the proof that even the faintest music can change everything.

The True Republic ends where it began: in the heart of the awakened.

Truth is Law. Conscience is Crown. Every Soul is Sovereign.

"When every heart becomes a throne, no crown is needed."
